

1.22. Healing laws and the "SvetL" complex

Modern medicine "got lost" in the maze created by itself and, having lost the "thread of Ariadne", is unable to get out of it. In the middle of the twentieth century, doctors said that when they had accurate diagnostic devices and the necessary medicines, they would lead humanity to a golden era of universal health... They got it all... But, nevertheless, people get sick not less than before, but more. Children are born with an already weakened immune system; going to a hospital or clinic relatively healthy, a person is very much at risk of leaving them in the company of a number of diseases that quite often lead to death. And everything can happen because a person just breathes the air of these "temples of health".

Having conceived the idea of writing the book "The Laws of Healing", Nikolai Levashov intended to explain the reasons for this and give an idea of the medicine of the future. But he failed to write this book. Nevertheless, the basic laws of healing were given in those books that had already been completed, since in the process of learning he constantly improved his approach to healing a person. Collecting this information bit by bit from all his books, it becomes clear to the attentive reader how and what novice healers should do, and what should be avoided so that instead of healing, they do not lead a person to death, both at the level of the physically dense body and at the level of the essence.

The knowledge of this medicine is already operating in the "SvetL" technologies developed by him, and the real results confirm the correctness of the new path. In this article of the series "Na_Chala/KNOWLEDGE from the Beginning" we will talk about how a living organism works, how and why diseases and pathologies arise, how the mechanisms of scanning the body are activated, describe methods for determining the root causes of diseases, strategies and tactics for treating diseases and restoring the body to a healthy state, up to genetic correction of the body.

This article is based on the chapter "Between Heaven and Earth" from the second volume of The Mirror of My Soul, an autobiographical novel by Nikolai Viktorovich LEVASHOV.

Healers and "healers".

... It so happened that instead of patients "eagerly" awaiting treatment from me , I had only a few real clients who were willing to pay, and then only very small amounts, which were barely enough for for food for Svetlana and I. In America, no one was interested in what I did and what I achieved in the USSR. Everything that was from the USSR was not considered as proof in America. One of the reasons for this was that all my documents were in Russian, which, for obvious reasons, the vast majority of Americans could not read. And in principle, Americans believed only in their medicine, and I still had no evidence of their treatment capabilities confirmed by American doctors. The example of Vera Ivanovna Orbelian had no meaning for all those who were not familiar with her, and those for whom it mattered fled as soon as I asked about payment.

So willy-nilly I had to start from scratch. Therefore, despite the complexity of the health problems of the people with whom I had to work, I decided to take payment for my work for each session, and a small amount so as not to scare people off with large numbers. After all, first I had to prove to the Americans that I really could solve various health problems, and that this is real and really happening, and not in words, as is very often the case with most people who call themselves healers.

There were just as many "local" healers in America as there were in the USSR, who practiced psychotherapy, at best, rather than healing, collecting money for their services from their clients as the average American person would have been accustomed to. Most of these techniques were methods of meditation or, at best, pumping the client with life force, and not always with the force of the "healer" himself! The person, having received a dose of energy during such a session, feels better for a while, which, in fact, is what the "healer" wants! The client is satisfied - what more do you need? What is important is that the client feels better, and how this effect is achieved - under the influence of psychotherapy or as a result of temporary pumping with the life force without "patching up" - does not concern the healer, or in fact the patient himself, no matter how paradoxical this may sound! And the reason for this is not only a desire to create the illusion of improvement for the "healers" on the one hand, and "impassable stupidity" and credulity of an average man, on the other hand, but the fact that modern medicine and the forces behind it have drummed into the minds of both sides (especially of sick people) that recovery is IMPOSSIBLE in principle! Only a temporary improvement (remission) is possible, after which it will get worse!

And "healers", without knowledge, without understanding the nature of what is happening, without understanding cause-and-effect relationships, and most importantly, without understanding what life is, living matter, a living being in full, are not able to rid a person of diseases, even if there is the strongest and most sincere desire to help people. And knowledge still needs the appropriate properties and qualities, the appropriate potential is needed so that understanding what is happening becomes a reality, leads to the recovery of a person, and not to the transition of the body into the phase of a chronic disease. It is this idea that modern "medicine" imposes on everyone.

Doctor, you promised that after the operation I would look like Alain Delon...
That's right! He's an old, sick man now, too!

Modern "medicine", at best, tries to "fight" with the consequences of the causes of diseases, and not with their root causes. This is equivalent to the fact that from a vessel that has a hole below the waterline, only pump out the water coming through the hole, without doing anything with the hole itself.

As long as the pump is able to pump out all the water coming through the hole, the vessel will stay on the surface, but as soon as the pump breaks down or stops working, for one reason or another, the ship will begin to sink under water. The methods of modern medicine are very similar to the situation with a ship breakdown. Only modern medicine has an even worse situation than a ship with a hole^[1]. In medicine, the "pump" is different medicines — potent chemicals, the vast majority of which are strong poisons. And therefore, unlike a water pump, a medical "pump" does not just pump out "water" from the "holes" of the human body, but also produces new damage, new "holes" in the human body, which are sometimes even more dangerous than those for which these medical "pumps" - medicines were used^[2].

So very often, not even being able to determine the root cause of the disease, modern medicine with its tools creates even more problems in its "heroic" fight against the disease, for which solution other "pumps"-medications are used, which already have their own side effects... and so on! And the worst thing about this situation is that modern medicine and the pharmaceutical industry behind it, is very profitable, so that people never get better, and this situation is the limit of their dreams...!

...In San Francisco I worked with the entire Orbelian family - George, his wife Marsha, their two children, Vera Ivanovna and a number of other relatives of the family - and no one paid me anything for my work!

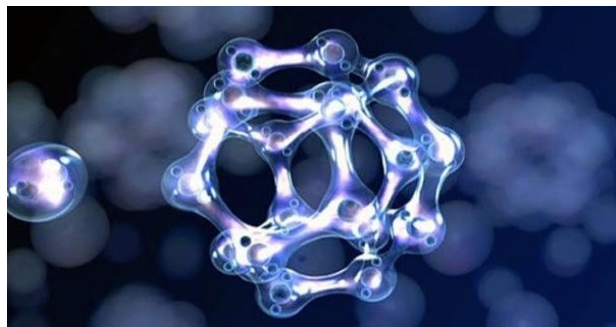

This same Marsha had cancer and a whole bunch of related diseases, she was very weak, tired very quickly, and slept a lot, for the reasons mentioned above. George had a severely damaged nose bridge, so much so that he could not breathe through his nose for most of his life. All attempts by American medicine to solve the problem were unsuccessful, as well as, if my memory serves me correctly, surgery! Their children were constantly sick with colds and their immune systems were very much weakened by the staphylococcal infection. For six months, pus, sometimes in large clots, came out of the three-year-old children's nasopharynx, the same pus that had previously surrounded the spinal cord and brain and not only depressed body functions, but also affected their mental abilities.

With many patients who did not really have any money, I worked for free, and there are quite a few of them in America, since for the vast majority of Americans $5,000 is a huge amount of money. The only conditions I had on my part in such situations were, they had to provide me with medical records before and during my work, with permission to use this data if necessary in my public appearances or publications. I felt I had no right to use my patients' medical records without their consent. And besides, I never told people that I thought they were already healthy without sending them for medical tests. And I did this not because I didn't know what to say, but because my knowledge could not be given in the form of medical test results that people were used to and trusted.

And besides, there are plenty of "healers" in America who, at best, did no harm to their patients and to whom people came with their problems. And then these healers would convince them that they had cured their disease, while medical tests showed that nothing had changed. And after such "experiences" and rumors, it just didn't make sense for me to say something like that, even though in my case the diseases were actually disappearing.

That is why I sent my patients to medical institutions, so that not I, but the doctors themselves, on the basis of medical tests, would draw conclusions about the state of health of my patients. It was only my job to tell them at the right moment in their work when and what medical tests would be good to have! That way, no one could accuse me of "lying" to them about their recovery. This conclusion was given to them by doctors whose names I did not even know, and who knew neither me nor what I was doing, and therefore could not be, even at a stretch, my "accomplices" in "deceiving" the poor, trusting "natives," no matter how much my enemies might want that. This strategy and tactics was the only right thing to do, especially taking into account that doctors could not understand what was going on with people, since in most cases they were not even aware that their patients were attending my sessions!

THE ROLE OF MOLECULAR SPATIAL STRUCTURES IN THEIR ASSIMILATION BY THE HUMAN BODY. LIFE FORCE.

One day in mid-March 1992, I was working with Steve Lovin, the owner of a small vitamin plant. He was very interested in my abilities, and not just because of his medical condition. So Steven Lovin came to his session one day and gave George his letter to read and translate for me later. George put his letter unopened on the table, and I began my work with Steve. As I worked with him, I took advantage of George's presence as interpreter to begin explaining to Steve Lovin what I thought was important to explain to him.

My explanation was not about his state of health, but about the very subtle chemical processes that occur in living matter. In other words, my explanation was not about obvious things, as some skeptical readers might think. I began to explain to him that for organic molecules it is not only the chemical composition and position of the atoms in the molecule that matters, but also the spatial position of these or those atoms in relation to each other, and that the spatial structure of a molecule is no less important than its chemical composition!

And that the main problem of industrial production of organic substances, particularly vitamins, is that vitamins in tablets are practically not assimilated by the living organism for one simple reason - while chemically identical to "living" vitamins, they have a fundamentally different spatial structure of molecules. And for this reason they are very poorly absorbed by the human body...

In my conversation, I touched upon this and a number of other issues that are very difficult to call obvious. When I finished my session with Stephen and my explanation, he was almost in a state of shock, as it turned out a little later when he began to comment on what I had said. The first thing he said was that he had already received all the confirmations of my abilities that he needed. The fact is that, having tuned in to work with him, I not only conducted my session, but also answered his questions set out in a letter that George had not even printed yet! It's just that this is normal for me, but for other people it looks like a real miracle, although there is no miracle in it! It was this episode that became the starting point of our cooperation with him for almost five years, but more on that later...

At the beginning of April, Svetlana and I came to the conclusion that it was necessary to accept one of the received offers and apply for a job. The best option for me was the offer of Steve Lovin, about whom I have already written earlier, who offered me a job as a consultant. This offer suited me the most because I completely managed my time and did what I considered necessary. My consulting services consisted in giving recommendations on how to make the vitamins produced really useful for humans, explaining to him that natural molecules, although they have the same chemical composition as those produced industrially, but their spatial structure is completely different, and that is why living organisms are very poorly assimilated. And, in addition, the molecules of living organisms differ from those produced industrially by the fact that the latter are dead, in the literal and figurative sense of the word.

Organic and inorganic molecules in a living organism have several qualitative levels in accordance with the level of development of a particular living organism, "living" molecules are saturated with so-called vitality. With the death of a living organism, this vital force flows out quite quickly from both inorganic and organic molecules! It is for this reason that the taste of fruits and berries, meat and fish varies greatly depending on when a person eats them - immediately after the fruits are plucked from the branches or beds, and the fish and other animals have just breathed, or a few hours, days, weeks after that. And it does not matter whether the food is frozen or cooled, what substances are used to preserve them — a few hours after the death of a living organism, plant or animal, the life force leaves the already dead body. In plants and their fruits, the vitality lasts a little longer, but, nevertheless, most often, when food gets on the table to a person in the modern world, they (products) no longer have vitality, but are full of toxic decay products. Of course, in the modern situation, it is impossible to deliver healthy food full of vitality to every person, as they say, just from a branch, a garden bed, a pond, a river, a farm, a chicken coop.

But if you understand the nature of what is happening, it is possible in the kitchen of every person to restore the lost vitality of food, and even at the same time destroy the poisons that have appeared as a result of the decay, for example, of adrenaline in animal meat, released by them into the blood at the time of death.

(In article 1-10."The Structure of Life and the "SvetL" Program describes in detail the role of the "SvetL" program in structuring water and food, in restoring their VITALITY. This program was created by N. Levashov and elaborated on later with a full understanding of the processes described above. The SvetL complex, by means of a field generator, reduces the state of water to the proportion of the "golden section", building hydrogen and oxygen atoms from a "dead" cubic structure into a "living" dodecahedral structure. Only after the restoration of the harmony of the "golden section" does the water become satiating and thirst-quenching. Water becomes useful for humans).[3]

Modern science does not know and does not understand this and many other things at all, and it would be possible to continue to explain the understanding of all this for quite a long time, but then my narration will become almost endless and tedious for most readers. So, my job was also to create the properties and qualities of living molecules from industrially produced vitamins. To do this, I periodically processed finished products in the company's warehouses...

READING THOUGHTS

And before returning to workdays, I would like to clarify my position on mind reading. I believe that every person's thoughts are his private business, and I never "climb" into a person's head without his consent. The exception is situations when a threat comes from a person, either to me or to others. In this case, I believe that I do not need the permission of such a person, and then I do not meddle in his personal affairs, but only look through what relates to danger. In all other cases, I do not "climb" into a person's head, even if he treats me clearly negatively. It is a human right to have an opinion, regardless of whether it is correct or not. As long as a person's opinion does not harm anyone— this is his personal business.

SCANNING

October and November were spent in routine work, although many may scold you: how can the return of health to people be routine? And it can be very simple when you do the same type of work every day! This does not mean that you do not empathize with each of your patients with their misfortune and do not rejoice when a person returns to health with your work. I was happy and rejoice every time I often give a person a second chance, a second life, and I always hoped and continue to hope that he uses this second chance or second life for the benefit of himself and everyone else, but ... this does not make my work stop being routine! After all, if you have already solved a problem once and realized that "two plus two equals four", then at the first moment you grow wings, and you are full of joy that you managed to solve this problem! But if you have to repeat over and over again that "two plus two equals four" and repeat it a million times, then, despite the fact that this statement is correct, it no longer carries the "freshness" of the first discovery and becomes routine! The same is true with treatment: when you first encounter a problem in the human body and find a way to rid a person of this problem, you really feel joy that you managed to find the right solution. But when you then face the same task again and again, and again, ... then the joy of novelty disappears, and routine appears! Although for each person his own health problem is an almost Universal problem, and when you solve this problem, a person is incredibly happy. I am also glad that I was able to help another person, but for me there is no novelty of creativity, finding solutions, developing strategies and tactics, all that gives a person the flight of the soul, at least for me. (The issue with routine was resolved when Nikolai was working on creating such a program that would be able to scan, analyze, and develop tactics for applying the necessary change of programs at the level of a person's essence. To scan again and again create flows of primary matter ("dark matter" - by definition of official science), necessary for a person at the moment of the qualitative state of his essence and organism. This and other programs were implemented in "SvetL" technologies, which made it possible to get rid of individual work with each patient)[4].

Of course, every person, even with the same health problem, has his own peculiarities. Everyone has different genetics, a different essence and different dynamics of the development of the disease, caused by the fact that each combination of genetics and essence is unique in its nature.

This uniqueness is manifested in the nuances of the perception of the person himself to my influence, in which organs and systems of this person are weakened and which are not! But with all this, a stomach ulcer, for example, remains a stomach ulcer! And although in each case the ulcer itself may not necessarily be located in the same place in different people, but ... in any case, the ulcer forms on the lower inner wall of the stomach, at least I have never come across stomach ulcers in other places! And it could not be otherwise, since a stomach ulcer appears due to the fact that, for one reason or another, gastric juice begins to be produced in the human stomach when there is no food in it, and the juice accumulated in the lower part of the stomach instead of food begins to "digest" the mucous membrane, which produced this very gastric juice!

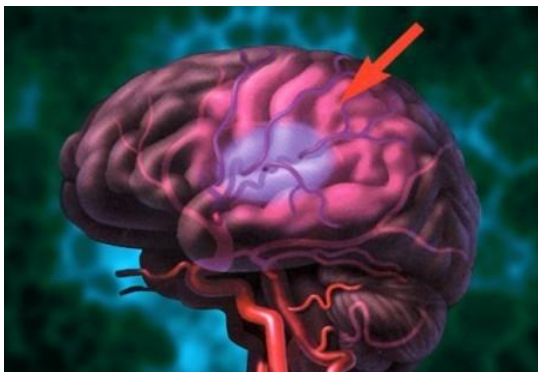

Duodenal ulcer Peptic ulcer

And the gastric juice corrodes the gastric mucosa up to the stomach muscles, and if the process is not stopped, the gastric juice will "digest" the muscles of the stomach walls in the place where the process began, and the so-called perforation of the ulcer will occur! When an ulcer is punctured, gastric juice and stomach contents enter the human abdominal cavity, with all the consequences that follow from this! Here are briefly possible options for the development of peptic ulcer disease. And despite the fact that people have different genetics, different essences, their own dynamics of the development of peptic ulcer disease, and there are other individual nuances, my work in order to restore a person to health is not very diverse.

If a person has an open ulcer, after its location is determined, I first of all seek to stop internal bleeding. To do this, I block damaged blood vessels by growing a kind of insulating "partition" of connective tissue inside the damaged vessel. When I achieve this, the internal bleeding stops, but this is not the solution to the problem. This is only the creation of a temporary patch! And then I begin work on restoring damaged tissues, growing new tissues layer by layer, starting from the innermost damaged layers. And the stomach muscle cells are the first to be restored, moreover, the damaged cells are completely split, and in their place completely healthy, full-fledged tissue cells that were before the damage are created. And thus the stomach ulcer grows layer by layer: first the muscle tissue, and then the gastric mucosa itself. When the process is completed, the stomach ulcer disappears completely, as if it never existed, which is confirmed by appropriate medical examinations. But that's not all.

It remains to remove the cause of the ulcer, and the reason is that the vagus nerve stimulates the gastric mucosa inadequately!

The production of gastric juice by the stomach should be proportional to the volume of food in the stomach and its qualitative composition. A number of body systems are involved in this, starting with the taste buds of the oral cavity, which allow us not only to taste food, but also send a signal to the corresponding areas of the cerebral cortex about which organic substances are on the way to the stomach - proteins, fats or carbohydrates! And while the food is moving through the esophagus, the brain is already giving the command through the reticular formation, through the spinal cord, to the vagus nerve, what type of gastric juice and to what extent the stomach should produce in order to fully digest this food.

This, again, is a very brief description of the human digestive process. I did not begin to describe which nerves and how the signals go, and in what sequence, because this may be interesting only to narrow specialists, but I mentioned the complex connection of the digestive process in order to give the reader of these lines an understanding that modern medicine very often does not even understand what is happening in the human body, and if it does, it cannot change anything, only uses purely mechanical actions. A detailed description of these processes can be found in previous articles: "The basics of Cognition of the "SvetL" Programs, or biology with pictures and a little about the Brain" and "Cancer as a form of cell existence and the "SvetL" Complex."

So, for one reason or another, a signal from the brain coming through the reticular formation of the brain reaches the vagus nerve, which stimulates excessive secretion of gastric juice, which ultimately leads to peptic ulcer disease. So, in order to prevent the appearance of ulcers in the future, it is necessary to find the site in the nervous stimulation system of the stomach, where a system failure occurs, as a result of which the vagus nerve is overexcited, which leads to the appearance of ulcers. And after discovering the root cause, it is necessary to restore the balance of the sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous system, reticular formation and brain. By the way, modern medicine does not even imagine how this system can be adjusted. So, using the example of a stomach ulcer, I tried to show that, despite some individuality of each person, the work remains essentially the same, and therefore, after a clear understanding of the essence of the problem, actions take a routine character. That's it!

Of course, from time to time you can come across something fundamentally new, even in the case of stomach ulcers, but every time there is less and less new in this case.

So, back to the routine...

On the first of January 1993, in the evening, I flew from San Francisco to New York! My final destination was not New York, but a small town in the State of New Jersey. According to my arrangement, I came to one of my patients named Dan Hartman. Dan became my patient back in late April, early May 1992. He contacted me through one of my patients and came to San Francisco. He turned out to be a very pleasant person, he completely lacked the star disease, although he was quite a major figure in the world of popular music, performed as a soloist, wrote music for songs and films. He turned out to be quite a sensitive person to my influence, and after some time he decided to take a course with me according to my method. He stayed in San Francisco for about a month, after which he flew to his home, and I continued to work with him from a distance. I had a pretty serious contract with him, according to which he had to pay in three stages. Dan sent me the first part of the money by mail, and the second part had to be paid, according to the agreement, upon my arrival to him. And so, I'm flying to New York for ten days in order to conduct another course with Dan, as they say, "live". While visiting Dan, I had only one thing to do — to have a session with him every day. On one of the days of my stay on the East Coast, Dan suggested that I meet with his attending physician, whose office was located in New York. Dan passed the necessary tests, which showed that he was making progress, which pleased him. I talked to his doctor, who turned out to be very open to what I was doing, we discussed the pressing problems related to Dan's illness together and parted on a friendly note, after which Dan and I returned to his house.

Before moving on to the next page of my life, I would like to finish my story about Dan Hartman. He was very pleased with the results of my work and called me for several months after my departure. But then, when he had to decide whether to continue receiving treatment from me or not, he decided to stop the course of my treatment, as he was promised that for much less money he would be quickly put on his feet, but the treatment system that was offered to him was not allowed in the USA. Therefore, he went to Ukraine, where he underwent a "miraculous" course of treatment for little money. After this "miraculous" course of treatment, he returned home in critical condition, he was embarrassed to turn to me for help, after everything that had happened and after a while he died. As I have already mentioned, he had to either pay for four months of work or refuse my services. He chose the latter because of the desire to save money, relying on false information that he would be helped in Ukraine, and it would cost him less! It is quite possible that the American mentality has worked for him, the essence of which is that if you can pay less, an American will always pay less, especially if he is presented with information in a beautiful "wrapper", the contents of which can be found out only after buying a "candy". The "candy" that he came across turned out to be fake, but it promised a quick recovery and for less money. It is a pity that I still could not complete his treatment, despite the rather good progress.

BRAIN RESTRUCTURING

The whole month of March was full of work with patients, but not only with them. At our first "base" of our own in America, we resumed our other work in a calm atmosphere, which had nothing to do with America or making money. Of course, this "base" was not ours in the full sense of the word, but it was important that we got the long-awaited freedom and the opportunity to regulate our own lives. That is why Svetlana and I returned to our other work in this small room. I started inventing new brain rearrangements again, inventing new structures, looking for fundamentally new methods and ways to solve problems, and all this immediately, without delaying, to test in practice. Most often I acted as a "guinea pig" myself, sometimes Svetlana volunteered, but I agreed to it only in some cases. And the reason for the reluctance to conduct my experiments on anyone other than myself was not the reluctance to share the "glory" with someone else, as some might think, but the fact that I did not want to risk anyone else but myself.

The thing is that when I came up with something new, unknown to me before, I still had no idea how and what a person would feel if I tried to put my new idea into practice. Therefore, when I had another "crazy" idea, I immediately ran it on myself, making the necessary improvements until the new development became "edible"! By the concept of "edible" development, I understand a well-established and harmonized structure with the human body, which no longer creates any unpleasant side effects.

The fact is that when you create something that no one has ever created before, or you know nothing about something like that, you have no idea how it's going to "behave" in practice. And that is why very often when creating new structures and qualities I had to experience a lot of unpleasant moments that required immediate fine-tuning. It usually consisted in creating additional structures and qualities without which the new "things" I had invented could not only work as they were supposed to, but very often even worked together with something that had already been created before. And it was only when I was able to bring my novelties "to mind" on my own, only after that did I create them at Svetlana's place.

And such "digestion" itself is a very heavy load, and very often I myself, who was already sufficiently accustomed to such experiments, had a hard time when incredible fatigue and weakness piled on my body. And it was only thanks to these improvements of mine, everything fell into place, and the new load was no longer so heavy for the physical body! Most often, these improvements of mine were nothing more than the coordination of what I already had with the new qualities and structures that I was coming up with. And for such coordination, it was very often necessary to create new bodies for the essence, to search and find fundamentally different primary matters in order to create new bodies of the essence, without which coordination would be impossible. Anyway, after creating a new one, it took some time to "digest" this very "new", after which everything came into full order, but in a fundamentally different order, at a different qualitative level.

That is why I tested everything new on myself, and only after fine-tuning I made new changes in Svetlana without any "accompanying" phenomena. After each transformation, Svetlana's already considerable capabilities became even more multifaceted. The possibilities of a complete exit from the body during sleep, and not only, have acquired a completely different qualitative level. Even after the first brain rearrangements, Svetlana's essence ceased to depend on the physical body when leaving the physical body. It no longer mattered the distance the essence was moving away from its physical body, the potential accumulated by the physical body during the day no longer mattered.

All this ceased to have any meaning, because the silver thread connecting the essence and the body disappeared as a result of qualitative transformations of the essence and the physical body of Svetlana, and instead there was a direct connection between the body and the essence through the created structures of the brain and similar structures of the essence itself. At the same time, the created structures affected the space so much that the distance between the essence and the physical body did not play a role at all. Whether it was a distance of sextillions of light-years or microns, it didn't matter at all.

This, firstly, and, secondly, the essence itself had the opportunity to create any potential for its activity. At the same time, the essence, being outside the body, was at the same time in its physical body! This only seems absurd at first glance. As it is, an essence can be either in its body or out of it! How can it be both, and "without bread", as Winnie the Pooh said, answering the question of Brother Rabbit about what he prefers: bread with honey or with condensed milk? So this is possible not only for a wonderful cartoon character! It's just that after qualitative changes and rearrangements of the essence and the brain, a completely different "physics" begins to work, or rather, the nature of what is happening is completely different! And the nature of what is happening has absolutely nothing to do with any earthly laws of nature, especially those operated by modern "science".

One way or another, as a result of the transformation of the essence and the brain, fundamentally new qualities and capabilities appear, which simply do not exist, and in this regard it becomes very problematic to convey their essence in terms familiar to most...

For most, all this was and remains beyond understanding and possibility, so was it worth trying to look for even a simple understanding? Of course not, it was simply impossible.

And not because we looked at people arrogantly, but because it was simply impossible for others to even understand what we were talking about. And it's not their fault. Is it possible, for example, to blame someone born blind for not being able to see the colors of the world? Of course not! And in order for the "innate blind" to understand what we are talking about, it was necessary to first make him sighted. Without this, an attempt to explain something to the "born blind" simply loses all meaning. If after the end of treatment, which people, if they did not understand how it happened, but accepted because they received personal benefits from it - recovery from diseases that medicine was unable to cope with, then working in Space lay beyond the understanding of the vast majority, and it did not even make sense to talk about it with them, because no one could check and "feel" anything. Because for the vast majority, the disappearance of health problems was sufficient, due to the fact that medical tests confirmed the disappearance of pathologies, and, as they say, "the main thing is ... the main thing is ... the main thing is that the suit fits," or in other words, the health problems disappear, and how they disappeared, they didn't really care! Just as few people care how the TV, computer, etc. works, the main thing is that you can press the remote control button and the TV will start working. And this suits everyone, despite the fact that virtually no one understands or knows how everything works. And on this "stands" the consumer civilization created by social parasites. In principle, it is not necessary for everyone to understand everything — this is even impossible for the vast majority, because this requires knowledge, talent, willpower, desire and a lot of time. And most people do not want to waste their time on such "unnecessary" things, and even if they did, not everyone would be able to achieve an understanding of how a TV, computer, etc. works, not to mention phenomena that lie outside the usual material world, the world as most understand it.

(Such ignorance, unwillingness to waste time on such "unnecessary" things as KNOWLEDGE and how dishonest people use it, are described in two wonderful articles "THE MIRROR IS NOT HIS SOUL..." [5] and "The Looking Glass of the Mirror is Not His Soul." [6]

EMOTIONS.

In general, with any work at other levels, it is necessary to avoid any emotional fluctuations.

This does not mean that a person should turn into a kind of insensitive dummy! No, and no again! Just for a high-quality scan, it is necessary to achieve maximum concentration on the scanned object and abandon everything in the world. And then, and only then, you can get reliable information about the scanned object.

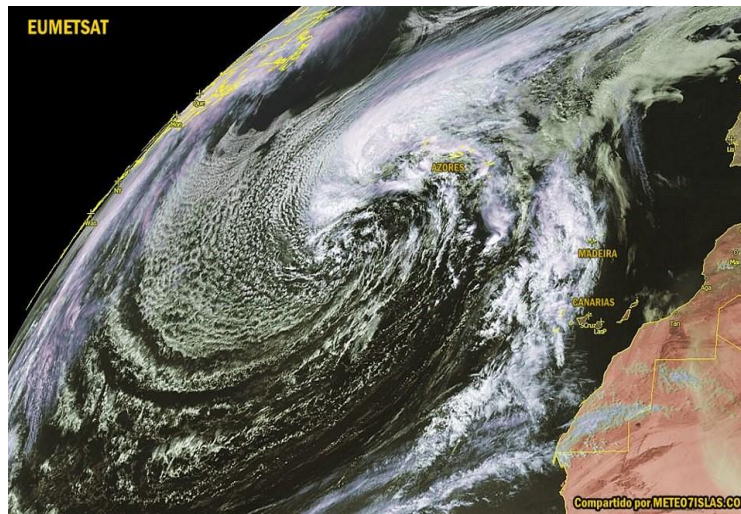

And any emotion, even the most wonderful one, knocks a person out of a state of concentration, there is an outburst of vitality, the higher bodies of a person's essence automatically overlap in an excited emotional state, and a huge amount of information is lost during scanning. Information that comes from higher levels of scanning, and it is at these levels that you can get basic information about the object or subject of interest.

(It is necessary to find the very reason for the deviation in the formation of the essence, and this happens at high octaves of non-inertial mass. If the "scanning" cannot collect all the necessary information from the beginning of the formation of pathology, then his conclusions and the choice of the method of exposure will not be correct. Only if there is a maximum of information, is it possible to correct pathological changes correctly. The "SvetL" complex is not subject to emotional fluctuations, so the accuracy of scanning and the choice of strategy and tactics of recovery will be the most accurate. This reduces the recovery period compared to the actions of a human "healer").

So when working on other levels of reality, and not only when scanning, full volitional control over emotions is necessary, and at a certain level of development emotions also become dangerous for people around them and even nature itself. A powerful outburst of emotions can "knock out" people, and at a certain level of development and cause natural disasters, such as earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, floods, etc. Therefore, everyone who has reached a certain level of development should have a corresponding level of responsibility. And responsibility at the same time should be in the first place, despite the fact that a person may even have an adequate emotional reaction! And, despite the right to an adequate emotional reaction, a person should prioritize his responsibility for the consequences of his completely legitimate emotion! So controlling your emotions is a necessity! And the higher the level of human development, the higher his level of responsibility, not only for actions, but also for emotions. It is also curious that the outburst of emotions disarms a developed bright person, deprives him of the possibility of using the capabilities of high and higher evolutionary levels. That is why social parasites of all levels, including the cosmic one, before attacking, try to bring their opponent out of a state of internal equilibrium in order to block the use of the possibilities of levels that are inaccessible to them, and therefore very dangerous for them! So the arrogance, defiant and provocative behavior of social parasites is not only the essence of their personalities, but also a kind of rather effective weapon, which they very cleverly use.

It is sometimes very difficult to maintain inner harmony and tranquility, but it is a necessity. Otherwise, defeat is likely as a result of emotional blocking of the possibilities of high evolutionary levels.

IT'S EASIER TO WORK WITH NATURE.

Almost all of my work with human wellness has differed considerably in time from the work with natural phenomena that I have already written about, and about which I have not yet written. When you work with natural phenomena, there are no limitations on the power and scale of the work. And when you work with a person, paradoxically enough, you have to work with many problems of the human body for a long time, and the treatment can last for several years! And there is one reason for that - every particular person can only withstand a certain load per time unit, and there is no possibility to do everything faster for one simple reason: when the load is higher than critical for this particular person, there is already destruction of his organism! Because with overloading the living tissues and organs of the body are not able to function, and the cells begin to die! So there is a paradox: the health problems of a specific person are incommensurable in scale with the solution of natural phenomena, and the time spent on solving the latter is incommensurably small compared to the time spent on solving the health problems of a specific person!

But this paradox is explained very simply: a person can be compared to a vessel in which only a limited volume of liquid is placed. And it doesn't matter how much of this liquid is available, even though the whole ocean, but only as much as it can hold will fit into the vessel! If you try to pump more liquid into this vessel under pressure, it will simply collapse!..

(The "SvetL" complex is dosed, in accordance with the changes, gives a load, and a person can regulate it - reduce or increase it, listening to his condition. This is an individual HEALER who is at the complete disposal of his recovering master.)[7]

I never tell my patients that they will become healthy very quickly and completely, even when I have already had many positive results in the treatment of certain problems. Especially when the problems are serious, and they cannot be solved very quickly, even with all the desire! I always tell my patients that I will try to do my best, and if there are no surprises, I hope everything will be fine, even when I am one hundred percent sure of a positive result and already have experience solving such problems. Only when the job is done, I talk about it as a fait accompli, and while everything is in the process, I consider myself not entitled to make promises that I have not yet fulfilled.

I have such an approach, an approach based on responsibility for what I do, and until the event has happened, I do not consider myself entitled to declare it as an event that has already happened. I have always been outraged when people who know little and have never cured at least one person from a specific disease declare to others that they will quickly and easily solve ANY health problems! And I am even more surprised by people who swallow this lie in the literal and figurative sense, and at the same time do not even ask about any evidence of the truthfulness of what was said!

Usually, when you ask "those who have cured many of terrible diseases" about providing at least one proof of what has been said or about the possibility of showing at least one "saved" to the people, "in a strange way" everything turns out to be under a big secret from the "miracle worker", and he (she) cannot, has no right to talk about it! I think the situation is very clear, at least for me and, hopefully, for those reading these lines...

The opinion of an Amateur from science

Now I am sitting and writing answers to the questions that we have collected from the Participants of the "SvetL PROGRAMS". More than 60 questions that concern people. Those who want to know, feel and "feel" what they have repeatedly heard and "read" both from N. Levashov and other Russian Scientists. Those who READ, VIEW, "scroll through" our articles written SPECIFICALLY for people to understand, finally, where is the LIE, the TRUTH AND THE TRUTH? And not only in matters of medicine and Human health, which WE have put "AT the FOREFRONT" today in the series of articles "KNOWLEDGE FROM NA_CHALA". I can assure YOU all that in this article, compiled from the available and published materials of the RUSSIAN SCIENTIST N. V. LEVASHOV, YOU will find half the answers to YOUR questions.

You will find it YOURSELF, draw conclusions YOURSELF and "break out", finally, from the "circle" of lies into which you were driven by those who do EVERYTHING so that people do not know such information and have NO PROSPECT of developing themselves, their ESSENCE (Brain). There is one piece of advice - take, before it's too late, a "BIG SHOVEL" (it is possible at the first stage of cognition and a small one, but better the one that you can already "lift") and dig, dig, dig... Look for the TRUTH AND THE TRUTH in this huge "pile of information and so-called academic knowledge." WE, THE RUSSIAN SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL SOCIETY, WILL HELP YOU WITH THIS.
